

AT THE OCTAGONHOUSE

It Wasn't a Burglar That the Pretty Intruder Encountered.

By CLARISSA MACKIE.

Copyright, 1909, by Associated Literary Rosamond Lee walked slowly down the rose-bordered path to the tall stone wall that inclosed the deserted house next door. The owners were abroad, and she had no prospect of their immediate return, so she went to the Octagon House, as it was called.

Rosamond had made many excursions about the neglected grounds and dreamed many dreams beneath the noble trees that rose from the base of the building. Flowers and shrubs had their seasons, and now she saw the great eruptions that raced up and down the green branches.

Her family laughed at her fondness for the Octagon House, but predicted a speedy abandonment when the Phillipses came home again, for Mrs. Phillips was old and irascible and much feared by Rosamond, since she was a little child.

She followed the stone wall to an interesting fence which served as a stepping stone. In a trice she had jumped lightly to the soft turf of the other side and sped swiftly across the dappled grass toward the house, which she had visited frequently.

On a quiet September day when the leaves were falling, she was looking in the window, and I thought you were a burglar, and so I tried to frighten you away by pretending I had a husband. I live next door, but I am not afraid of a burglar. You may laugh if you want to.

"But I don't want to laugh," she said softly.

"I think it was awfully brave of you, you know, when you believed me to be a burglar."

"Yes, I am a burglar," she said, "but I am not afraid of a burglar."

She followed the stone wall to an interesting fence which served as a stepping stone. In a trice she had jumped lightly to the soft turf of the other side and sped swiftly across the dappled grass toward the house, which she had visited frequently.

Many times after that David Phillips strayed up the rose-bordered path to see Rosamond Lee and the following June when the roses were rioting the garden, he would call on her, and to her surprise pass into the room of the rejuvenated "Octagon" House, of which Rosamond became in fact the mistress.

He could say "No," but the young man was a simpleton and had no sense. His heart almost stopped beating when he glanced carelessly toward her vine-covered retreat before he sat down on the top step to light a pipe.

"He's wondering how to get in," she said. "I am not afraid of a burglar, only I were brave enough I would go out and frighten him away, but I am fearfully afraid of burglars, and yet if he should break in, I would stand up and mop his forehead vigorously with a handkerchief, and she noticed that his hands were exposed by exposure to the sun."

The old man was a simpleton, but most stopped hearing when he glanced carelessly toward her vine-covered retreat before he sat down on the top step to light a pipe.

Presently she dropped a book on the door and rustled out of her retreat with a haughty expression on her face. She had a look of contempt on her face and pulled off his gray cap.

"I beg your pardon," he stammered.

"I didn't know any one was around."

Rosamond fixed him with a cold stare while she mentally decided that he was too good-looking to be caught in a trap, and she was too good-looking to be caught in a trap.

She lifted her pretty brows inquisitively.

"You wished to see some one?"

"Why—no, I didn't expect to see any one here, I thought the place was vacant," she stammered, knocking his pipe against the railing and slitting it into his pocket.

"It is not vacant, I am here," said Rosamond bravely.

"So I—see," with an air of chagrin.

"The house is well protected."

"I am glad of that," he said heartily.

Rosamond laughed at his words.

"Perhaps you wished to see my husband," she said in a wavering voice.

The man started violently, and his eyes forsook her face and dropped to the ground. "Of course it would be a pleasure," he said. "I'm around."

Rosamond edged closer to the steps and ran lightly down them, but he did not run away. She cried breathlessly. Then she turned and sped swiftly toward the wall that divided the place from her home. Once there, her father came to the window to the village for assistance, and thus the burglar would be prevented.

She thought he heard swift steps behind her, and she reneged her speed toward the wall. Her heart was beating almost to suffocation as she stepped on a loose stone. She uttered a sharp cry, and the stone slipped and she fell to the ground.

Now she heard swift steps in reality as the stranger crossed the turf and bent anxiously above her.

"I don't have to hurt yourself," he said gravely.

"I have sprained my ankle," admitted the girl with white lips.

"What were you trying to do—not to scale the wall?"

"Yes."

"Was your husband over there?"

A red flush crept to her brow.

"Yes," she said.

"Shall I call him?" asked the unexpected burglar.

"Please, just my luck! Well, sir, you mustn't worry about me."

EDITORIAL NOTES

Good morning.

The B. C. revolution failed to materialize.

The revolutionists in the Okanagan riding are in full retreat and have burnt their bridges.

When you see a banana resting on the sidewalk and a fat man unconsciously approaching it let the indications point to a early fall.

The B. C. Conservative government, having practically no opposition, it is to be hoped that they will place legislation on the statute books of that province equal to that of Alberta.

Now that the inland defence problem has been solved by a Calgary gentleman. Schooners of greater draught than those now in vogue will have to be secured for the defence of the Pass towns.

The elections for the village council will soon take place.
The Enterprise sincerely wishes that the next council will be an progressive as the present one and that men of both brains and action are elected.

The kickers and croakers have no place in a village with the progressiveness of our village.
The man who opposes needed public improvements and stands in the way of progress is not a good citizen.

Surely the miners of Hillcrest are not going to stand for their school to be closed. There were forty-five children attending at that school before the order was given to close. If it had been the coal company that had closed the school, a strike would have been declared instantly, but the whole question is up to the ratepayers and those interested in the good and welfare of the children and they should see that the school is opened at once.

If you are a kicker and see the shadows of failure in everything that is proposed to help the town. For heaven's sake, go into some secluded canyon and kick your own shadow on the claybank and give the men who are working to build up the town a chance. One long faced, hollowed, whining, caping, chronic kicker can do more to keep away business and capital from a town than all the drouths short crops, cinch bugs, cyclones and blizzards combined.

When Fernie gets two daily papers, that city will not only have the cognomen of "Pittsburg of Canada" but "Stratford on Elk", (heavy on the elk.)

BY THE SOUTH FORK SCRIBE

Great Promise of South Fork Coal and Agricultural Wealth

It gives me great pleasure Mr. Editor to inform the outside world of the beauties and the richness of the valley of the South Fork river.

Upon leaving the C. P. R. at Burns or Lundbreck and travelling in a southwesterly direction we soon come to the homestead of Joseph Johnson. This homestead is situated on section 32, range 2, township 6, west of the 5th Meridian. As you go down the banks of the river and cross at the Garfield ford into one of the most beautiful valleys in Canada and not only the most beautiful but the richest valley. This river is a very clear stream and running very swift through deep canyons and over beautiful falls and has a fall of about four hundred feet in six miles. It is well supplied with trout and grayling as far up as the headwaters.

Crossing over to the South side of the valley and west, the first place of importance which you arrive at is a large coal field belonging to Mr. George Jackson and J. H. Farmer, situated in township 6. On the slope of this valley there are eight well defined seams of coal. These seams run south for a distance of seven miles and as far south as the coal property of the Beaver Creek Coal Co., who have a large force of men opening up the seams and doing considerable development work.

Across the river and to the north one can see a splendid homestead with splendid buildings. On this ranch are raised admirable crops of wheat and oats. The owner of this ranch is H. H. Herron. To the west is Mr. Sedgwick's horse ranch. There is an excellent range for stock in this valley, cattle and horses find abundant food in winter as well as in summer. Travelling on to the southwest we again strike the river and here the banks contain an inexhaustable supply of fire brick clay which has been thoroughly tested and found to make a splendid brick. This will be an important asset in building up the Past towns and coke ovens.

Farther west Mr. Drake ranch looms into view. This farm is fenced and much improved. To the northwest of it is the ranch of Thomas Ashdown. This ranch contains a fine park, a natural shelter for stock in winter.

Just below this ranch the south fork of the Old Man's river receives another tributary known as the Little South Fork. In the angle of land formed here a large slate quarry has been discovered but as yet no development work has been done as transportation is a difficult problem.

Soon the river runs through a typical canyon, as the Iron canyon. Here the Carbon Hill Coal & Coke Company have their iron mine. In olden times the Indians came here to get their "paint".

On section 16 George Jackson has located a beautiful homestead. The front of it is terraced to the river. The whole ranch consists of a number of high level tablelands. The soil is black and easily worked, watered by a sparkling brook.

Directly across the river is the Carbon Hill coal mine which is under development. The grade of coal is equal to that of any other in the Pass. There are a large number of men working now. To the north side of the river an office has been built, other buildings are in course of erection.

A company is now surveying a railway line from Burns to the South Fork country and to the summit of the North Kootenay Pass. This line will open an immense country and create much stir in the valley.

About one mile west is another coal mine, called the Byron Creek mine, and is owned by

VICTOR LEMIEUX

The West Canadian Coal Company. It is opened on Byron Creek and runs as far south as the South Fork. A mile and a half still farther west is another extensive seam of coal. This has been opened up at Blairmore.

Running south for twelve miles the coal seams crop out here and there. Eight miles of these coal mines are leased by local parties.

About four miles west you come to the Hastings Syndicate mine, better known as the Head Syndicate mine. Mr. Leslie Hill is the consulting engineer and manager of this syndicate. "There are eight miles of outcroppings here," said Mr. Hill. "Exhaustive preparations are under way to estimate the exact grade and amount of coal in sight. So far the investigation shows that the seam is the same as that of the International at Coleman. The entire formation is tilted at an angle of 45 degrees to the perpendicular. There is 2000 feet of the seam above the surface level. This property runs from Coleman to the South Fork, a distance of fourteen miles.

West of this and running from Gardner Creek to the lime rock in the mountains is the last but not the least, prospect in the South Fork valley. A syndicate have a prospector's lease on fourteen sections of coal lands, which have been prospected and opened this summer. They had a large number of men working and developing the seams and found them varying in width from three to thirteen feet.

There are a number of other indications of coal seams in the valley but they are not prospected. There are thousands of acres of good timber lands. Senator McLaren intends to put in a sawmill as soon as transportation is provided. The Chicago and Alberta Oil company have already gone to some expense in building a passable wagon road for fifteen miles to their oil wells on Lost Creek and are now installing an up-to-date well-drilling outfit.

The South Fork country is in the lime-light now and will in time be the industrial centre of Southern Alberta.

ON THE ROOF.

He Didn't Want to Seize the Opportunity, but She Did.

By HARRIET LUMMIS SMITH.
(Copyright, 1918, by Associated Literary Press.)

"We've time enough yet to take a look at the city from the top of the Seclusion building. It's worth seeing, you know."

Prudence should have vetoed the suggestion. For the longer half of the blissful afternoon Viola had been aware that Raymond's eyes were saying more than they should and that their mute eloquence was singularly sweet and satisfying. Considering the fact that she was as good as engaged to another, she had counseled Right. A voice within, an intuitive voice, cried out that at least the day would soon be over and urged her to make the most of it.

Viola compromised. "Mr. Raymond suggests our getting a view of the city from the roof," she said. "I think we are," she said, turning to her out-of-town guests. "If you are not too tired?" And her heart leaped at the promptness of their protest.

She walked beside Raymond silently, glad that he too seemed to have nothing to say. She was trying to let herself cling so fiercely to the joy of that afternoon together. He had come upon them quite by accident, but Viola knew that but for her he would have lifted his hat and gone his way. The girl had been so intent on her voice as she spoke his name, his been his undoing—and hers. They had lunched and taken a drive along the boulevards. Viola's country cousins had been most amiable. And now the western air was red and the time for saying goodby was near.

They stood looking down upon the city. Raymond, as in duty bound pointed out the objects of interest. The country cousins had upon his voice a power that she had not. They had not missed the sight for any thing. As for Viola, she had no eyes for the crawling streets between the steep cliffs of brick and stone nor for the crawling creatures down below. But surely she detected him looking at her.

He turned suddenly and looked into her eyes, and his own caught fire. A moment later they were standing together in an angle of the roof, she hidden from the view of their compatriots. The noise of the city below seemed far away.

Raymond broke the spell by a downward gesture. "I wish, it were all mine."

"You mean the whole town? What greediness!" she laughed.

"I mean that I care for it all you."

"Thank you, but I'm not ambitious to be a plutocrat. Of course one must have the things one is used to. Poverty is the worst of all."

"Is it?" His eyes challenged her. "Or don't you make it so hard for me?"

"You make it hard for yourself when you fight against your heart."

"Oh, you don't understand, Phil. It isn't as if I had only myself to think of."

"Do you ever give a thought to me?" She put her hands over her ears in sudden tremor. If she listened longer she was lost. "I must go," she said hurriedly. "I've stayed longer than I should, but it was so pleasant." She turned and fled, her feet on the roof, and he followed after. When he overtook her her eyes were dilated.

"They're gone!" she gasped.

"Who?"

"Why, Leonard and Bessie. What could have induced them to go without me?"

"I don't know, I'm sure. But they will be waiting for us without without doubt."

He tried the door, rattled the knot sharply and then questioning her gaze with a smile said, "Well, I'm sorry," he exclaimed. Then as Viola laughed hysterically he added in haste.

"Don't be frightened. It will be very easy to attract some one's attention."

Half an hour later, flushed and dripping with perspiration, he acknowledged his mistake. "Your cousin must have thought we had gone down before them. But after they get home and we fail to make our appearance it will of course occur to somebody that we're up here. And the only thing to do is to resign ourselves to wait with what patience we can muster."

She looked at him reproachfully, but did not meet his eyes. He sat down opposite her, leaning his head lazily at the roof. Fortunately Viola had pock her veil and smoothed her hair; apparently her appearance was to him a matter of complete indifference. He never turned his eyes.

Leonard and Bessie had found voice at last. "Are you going to sit here all alone, Viola? Haven't you anything to say?"

"I have plenty to say, but I can't say it without taking advantage of the situation."

A long silence, then Raymond felt the slipping of a small hand down his sleeve. "I rather think, Phil," said a tremulous voice, "that I want you to take advantage of the situation."

"The slip was long in coming. As the darkness fell Viola drew closer, and her hand stole into his own across his shoulder.

It was a night without a star, and for that reason it was the more startling when suddenly a blinding light illuminated the upper region where they sat. Viola shrieked and hid her face on her lover's shoulder.

"Only a searchlight, dearest. Rather startling on this pitch black night, wasn't it?"

Viola blushed in his arms. "Phil, do you suppose anybody—?"

"I suppose not. 'Perhaps,'" he acknowledged. "In fact, little girl, I rather hope somebody did."

Fifteen or twenty minutes later the sound of approaching footsteps told them that help was at hand. Ray stood motionless. The sound of a key turning in the lock. A grinning policeman and the watchman of the building confronted them. Explanations were exchanged. The elevator had stopped running at 6 o'clock, and two men had descended the narrow flights of stairs as blithely as if they were walking on air.

Viola's home was in an uproar. The story brought by the country cousins had aroused grave suspicions, which Viola's mother explained as she clung to Raymond.

"It couldn't have happened at a more unfortunate time. To begin with, Mr. Pickering was annoyed. He makes such a hobby of punctuality, you know. And then when Leonard and Bessie came—"

She raised her head from Viola's shoulder and looked sharply at the young man who had escorted her daughter home. Raymond bowed, "but you must make allowances for a lover who is still young."

"The suffragettes, further, realize the ineffectiveness of tea-table and drawing room chat, of indoor meetings where the participants are mainly those who are believed to suffice."

And, furthermore, the suffragettes is conscious of the necessity of converting the public to their cause. Therefore goes to the people direct, in the streets, on the highways and byways, and holds open air gatherings with able speakers to address the crowds. So does the suffragette spread the gospel of woman suffrage indiscriminately, as she pleases.

And still further does she recognize the necessity for recruiting and enlisting the men—the present voters. They alone can make woman suffrage possible, says Mrs. South M. Loebinger in the American Suffragette. The men must be brought to see the justice upon their political bosses, who in turn must instruct the legislators whom they have placed in office. It is love's labor lost to send large delegations to the legislature each year.

She wants it now, and she wants it quick. She wants it. It is her just, her natural right and her constitutional right.

She is too sensible to be stung by any criticism, whatever may be the source, and simply follows along the path of duty in her own way.

The jumper in frocks is fashionable this spring, but it is not carried out in the same way as it was last season. The net blouses are a popular addition, but they match the dress, after all, perfectly.

The summer frocks are used in self colors. Faded gingham in their normal positions are used on these jumper dresses, and cap sleeves trimmed with embroidery or lace at the back and laced across. In lace effect is another feature of this season.

This summer frock is made of linen or some similar material embroidered in color or in white. The box plait on the blouse lend themselves particularly well to this treatment. The neck may be finished either in sailor fashion or with a square effect.

A MOOTED QUESTION.

Differences Between Suffragette and Suffragist Satisfactorily Explained.

In response to the request and the numerous inquiries which there is no distinction between the suffragette and the suffragist, it may be well at this time to define the difference.

Both are working for the cause at issue, but, while the suffragist plots alone in the beaten track made by the great ploughers of the movement, and content herself with methods conservative, the suffragette is the product of the modern period. She is up to date in her methods.

The suffragette is militant. She is awake to present conditions and employs methods which are in keeping with those conditions, realizing the helplessness of that important, though unchallenged, part of the people—the women.

The suffragette, further, realizes the ineffectiveness of tea-table and drawing room chat, of indoor meetings where the participants are mainly those who are believed to suffice.

And, furthermore, the suffragette is conscious of the necessity of converting the public to their cause. Therefore goes to the people direct, in the streets, on the highways and byways, and holds open air gatherings with able speakers to address the crowds. So does the suffragette spread the gospel of woman suffrage indiscriminately, as she pleases.

And still further does she recognize the necessity for recruiting and enlisting the men—the present voters. They alone can make woman suffrage possible, says Mrs. South M. Loebinger in the American Suffragette. The men must be brought to see the justice upon their political bosses, who in turn must instruct the legislators whom they have placed in office. It is love's labor lost to send large delegations to the legislature each year.

She wants it now, and she wants it quick. She wants it. It is her just, her natural right and her constitutional right.

She is too sensible to be stung by any criticism, whatever may be the source, and simply follows along the path of duty in her own way.

The jumper in frocks is fashionable this spring, but it is not carried out in the same way as it was last season. The net blouses are a popular addition, but they match the dress, after all, perfectly.

The summer frocks are used in self colors. Faded gingham in their normal positions are used on these jumper dresses, and cap sleeves trimmed with embroidery or lace at the back and laced across. In lace effect is another feature of this season.

This summer frock is made of linen or some similar material embroidered in color or in white. The box plait on the blouse lend themselves particularly well to this treatment. The neck may be finished either in sailor fashion or with a square effect.

HEALTH AND BEAUTY.

The hair is often improved by heating the hairbrush before brushing the hair, thus softening the hair. The hair is then combed in a circle with the fingers over the cheeks, temples and forehead sufficiently to stimulate circulation. This serves to keep the tissues in healthy condition and will freshen the color.

Finger nails that retain their grayish tint are often caused by the use of nail polish and can be done with wet borax or borax dampened with ammonia or ammonia and peroxide of hydrogen. Molten the nails on the under side, slip the cantharides over the orange stick and wipe the nail edges. The nail edges are instantly turned a shell white.

Had the Effect.

"Yes," she said in answer to something he had asked, "the old songs are very beautiful."

"Beautiful!" he exclaimed enthusiastically. "Beautiful hardly describes them. They are—they are well, compared with the songs today."

"I agree with you, yet the old songs sometimes contain sentiments that one cannot wholly approve."

"I think you are mistaken."

"Will you give me an illustration. There is John Howard Payne's 'Home Sweet Home' for instance. You surely do not agree with all the sentiments it contains."

"Why not?" he asked warily. "Why not?"

"Because," he said, glancing at something he had seen, "there is a line in that song which says 'There's no place like home.' You do not believe that, do you?"

Then he coughed a hollow cough and went and went silently out into the night.

She Is So Sensitive.

"With some people it's all that's needed to get her into an instant when none is intended."

He remained motionless, looking at the man with the troubled look, looking for sympathy. "Now, last night I got myself into an awkward fix just trying to be agreeable and please everybody. I went to see a young lady, a young girl, and I did a darned poor job of it, and she would be more sensible. Girl friend of hers was there, and it was her first visit since she'd sent a crazy looking good for nothing decorated cup and saucer with scalloped edges and a birthday gift."

"What?" he asked, not shying off the sharp rebuke. "I just thought of you."

"How?" Hand palmed isn't it?"

"I'll tell you what to do," said the man with more experience. "Place a large bowl of fresh water in the room at the end of the evening, and the odor of the water will be good for the evening. I always do it, and my wife doesn't mind where I smoke."

JUDIC CHOLLET.

To Get Rid of Tobacco Smokes.

"My wife won't let me smoke in the drawing room because the odor of the tobacco smoke is bad for the children. What can I do?"

"I'll tell you what to do," said the man with more experience. "Place a large bowl of fresh water in the room at the end of the evening, and the odor of the water will be good for the evening. I always do it, and my wife doesn't mind where I smoke."

FRIBBLES OF FASHION.

Viol's Popular Shade This Spring in Frocks and Dress Accessories.

"There are a great many frocks and trimmings of it, but it is largely in the little dress accessories that it is most seen. Hats, parasols, slippers and stockings in its most delicate tones are to be observed on every side. Many women are wearing the new corset clasp safety guard.

It is the new corset clasp head shown, which is designed to add much to the comfort of the wearer. These clamps are shaped that when a corset is provided with them is fastened on the wearer more tightly and more firmly around all the good work of that rest.

When you sit down to chat with a friend, why don't you do some simple sewing, such as finishing seams, sewing on buttons or adjusting loose

"The will need to do all these things later on, and probably they will come up at the very time when you have an engagement to keep. If you are late for that engagement it puts you back for the entire day."

"If you get up at eight in the morning, for instance, for the next morning, see that you have clean slacks in your waist, a fresh dress collar and that your shoes are polished.

And don't throw your things around.

You take more time hunting for them than you would take in putting them

Don't waste your days with people that do you no good. Associate with those who stimulate you mentally or who are to rise in the world. It isn't necessary to be a snob or a clique, but it is important to be associated with those of whom you are in agreement.

THE VALUE OF TIME.

Making Every Moment Count the Secret of a Successful Life.

The average woman does not appreciate the value of time.

She is rushed and heated and over-worked because she does not make the spare moments count.

I have seen women sit a whole morning, idle, and then rush madly around about the house, trying to do all the good work of the day.

When you sit down to chat with a friend, why don't you do some simple sewing, such as finishing seams, sewing on buttons or adjusting loose trousers? You will need to do all these things later on, and probably they will come up at the very time when you have an engagement to keep. If you are late for that engagement it puts you back for the entire day.

If you go to bed at night lay your clean sheets in the wash tub, so that when you have clean sheets in your waist, a fresh dress collar and that your shoes are polished.

And don't throw your things around. You take more time hunting for them than you would take in putting them

Don't waste your days with people that do you no good. Associate with those who stimulate you mentally or who are to rise in the world. It isn't necessary to be a snob or a clique, but it is important to be associated with those of whom you are in agreement.

Learn to make time work for you and you will be able to accomplish everything you have to do.
